President’s Notes

Greetings,

Past and Present

Past: I trust we all can look back over the year rejoicing in what’s been and that you’ve had a blessed Christmas time sharing and receiving.

Presently: Looking into the New Year resting in the Mercy and Grace of God in Jesus Christ as it is available everyday the sun continues to rise.

As I was anticipating our family gathering for Christmas, three daughters, their husbands, and twelve grandchildren, I started rejoicing in the anticipation of being in the family of God and looking forward to meeting my Lord and Savior. (If you don’t have this hope, please get a Bible and read the whole book of John. It is written that you might believe.)

Right now I’m looking forward to a Targhee family reunion in July with current family members, new members, hopefully returning past members, a larger youth group then last year, and new youth leaders stepping up to help Lynette and Leslie. A great place to visit is “Noahs Ark” which is a huge water park. Hope to see YOU!!!

Note about last Presidents Notes. Our trip to the Tetons was a gift from our children.

Your President,
Warren Nellis

Meet the Newest Board Member
Russell Allred

1. Where were you born and raised? Is this your current locale?
I was born in Nephi, Utah. I grew up in Fountain Green, Utah and have lived here all of my life except the two years I was going to school.

2. When did you become acquainted with Targhee sheep? How long have you raised them?
My Father and I researched many breeds of sheep. We liked the traits of the Targhee’s best. We went to Dubois, ID at the Experiment Station. That is where we got our start in this breed. That was about 8 years ago.

3. What is your favorite Targhee trait?
I have been impressed with their mothering abilities, also their milking abilities.

4. What is the greatest issue facing the sheep industry and/or American agriculture?
Here in Utah access to public lands is one of the greatest issues we face. 79% of the total land mass in Utah is owned by federal or state government. The large sheep herds in Utah run mainly on those public lands.

5. Are you married? Do you have children? How many?
Yes, I have been married for seventeen years to my wife Jenny. We have three girls. Brailie is fifteen, Savannah is twelve, Cheznie is six. I am the fifth generation in raising sheep.

6. Do you have an occupation other than farming or ranching?
I am a journeyman lineman for Springville City Power.

7. Other than raising sheep, what are some of your hobbies and talents?
I do not have time for a hobby between high school rodeo and every sport you can think of plus dancing. I do good just to try to keep up. I am also an asst. Scout leader.

8. What is your favorite book?
I don’t have time for reading.

9. What is your favorite food?
Homemade bread.

Thank you Russell for volunteering time you didn’t have to help make USTSA a better organization!

Tri-State Meeting Hosts Wool Panel

Many U.S. wool buyers, warehousemen and wool processors gathered at the joint Idaho, Wyoming and Utah Wool Growers meeting Nov. 9-10 to discuss the 2012 wool season and to provide insight into the upcoming year. The panel consisted of Larry Prager and Scott Lammers, Center of the Nation Wool; Jason Banowsky, Lempriere USA; Mike Corn, Roswell Wool; Dan Gutzman, Pendleton Woolen Mills; Will Griggs, Utah Wool Marketing; Terry Martin and Rick Honaker, Anodyne Wool; and Bruce Barker, Great Plains Wool Co.

A general opinion was that the 2012 wool market was driven by a declining economic situation across Europe in conjunction with a warmer winter across the northern hemisphere, both resulting in disappointing garment sales last year. A larger inventory of garments resulted in less processing into fabrics, which ultimately resulted in less demand and lower trends in global raw-wool prices. The declining value of the U.S. dollar and the corresponding increase in the value of the Australian dollar was another contributing factor. It was also noted that the declining demand for goods forced China, the world’s largest wool processing country, to reduce overall production of finished garments.

Consensus among the buyers and warehousemen was that continued better preparation of U.S. wools would result in broader demand and a wider array of uses of U.S. wools, regardless of micron. Specifically, the continued removal and separation of bellies from fleeces, topknots, leg wool, tags and second cuts and any off colored wool due to stains. Buyers and processors continued to note the problems being experienced with black fibers in white wool, contamination of hair-sheep fibers and poly contamination. Excess branding paint and markers were also discussed along with suggestions for handling paint on cold days, application recommendations (keep brands to 4 mm or less) and the axiom that "less is better" when applying paint.

The panel expressed the need for a larger supply of wool to meet the demand. Reduced supplies from declining sheep numbers have resulted in higher overhead costs for all segments of the wool industry. Due to the large volume of wool needed for processors to minimize costs, any problems or issues that occur with the wool results in higher costs.

It was reiterated that developing a plan with the shearing crew can reduce contamination as well as decrease the stress for the sheep and the labor during harvest. Making contact with the buyer or warehouse representative to discuss potential wool outlets can also assist in proper wool preparation.

The National Sheep Improvement Program (NSIP) in the U.S. provides the framework for the genetic evaluation of sheep. Australia’s Lambplan is the engine that provides the analysis. The first article in this series highlighted the NSIP website (www.nsip.org) and information U.S. producers can find there. This article will focus on the partnership website Sheep Genetics of Australia’s Lambplan (www.sheepgenetics.org.au), and its unique features for making the most of the computer software (Pedigree Wizard).

If you haven’t visited the Sheep Genetics website lately, it has been updated and more user friendly. One thing immediately apparent to U.S. producers is that we have left the United States and are glimpsing into Australia’s sheep industry. Take some time to click on the different tabs across the top to see what folks are doing on the other side of the ocean. We often forget whether we are U.S. or Australian producers, we face similar issues.

As mentioned in the previous article, Targhee NSIP’s elite sire summary based on the U.S. Range Index can be found on the NSIP website (www.nsip.org). However, since we are Lambplan users, Targhee producers might want to look at the elite summary for the Maternal Index. This is the closest Australian index Lambplan offers to the U.S. Range Index. It provides some interesting contrasts to our own index and what Australian producers value in similar types of sheep. On the home page click on Breeding Services, then Maternal, and look at the Top 150 sires list.

Most Targhee producers have been enrolled in NSIP and Lambplan since we have entered this partnership. But, if you are new to the system or just want to refresh your memory, the Getting Started tab has some great information. Under this drop down menu, the spot you want to particularly look at is the FAQs. Here is a nice rundown of what Sheep Genetics provides, a review of the unique animal ID number, and definition of management groups.

The Membership and Service provider tabs are specific to Australian producers, but the Resources tab is where you can focus your attention. In this drop down menu is the Brochures and Fact Sheets tab. The one I have found most useful is the Pocket Guide. It is a great summary of everything we are evaluating through Lambplan. It is clear and easy to understand. Another fun and useful resource is Visual Sheep Scores. This is a great guide for evaluating sheep phenotypically (or visually) for undesirable traits. There are scoring systems for key traits such as wool color, wool character, dust penetration, face pigmentation, conformation, and face cover. If you are having trouble coming up with a consistent system for looking at these traits, this is a good resource. Also under the Resources tab is the Guide to Quality Data. This guide is more in depth than the Pocket Guide to Lambplan, discussing management group techniques and how to have effective progeny records.

These two articles are just a quick overview of the information available at the NSIP and Sheep Genetics websites. Like so many things, it is in our best interest to learn as much as we can about the programs offered to us. Often times, however, it is a bit of a chore. Setting aside a little time now and again is the best way to tackle a new project especially when the weather is cold and we are stuck inside.

The National Sheep Improvement Program is exactly what its name implies. The goal of NSIP is to improve the U.S. national sheep herd. We all know beauty is in the eye of the beholder. However, beauty for lamb and wool buyers is a consistent, high quality product. The difference between 18 micron and 22 micron wool is difficult to discern with the naked eye. But, to the owners of Smart Wool or Ilex, the difference is whether their end product is soft and able to be worn next to the skin or a scratchy shirt no one wants to wear or for that matter buy. To be competitive in today’s market sheep producers need to use the technology available to develop the kind of product of which the world will take notice. NSIP can help us accomplish that goal.

Lambplan ID #’s can now be on Registration Certificates

After several requests, there is now a place on the registration certificates to include the Lambplan ID’s. Simply provide the information in the last column of the Registration Applications with the Scrapie numbers to get the numbers added.

How Much of Your Grocery Bill Goes to Farmers?

To kick off the year, the National Farmers Union recently released their latest “Farmer’s Share” report. It is based on calculations derived from the monthly Agricultural Prices report that comes from USDA NASS and is compared to price points of common grocery food items at a Washington, D.C. Safeway supermarket. According to USDA’s Economic Research Service, farmers and ranchers only receive 15.8 cents of every food dollar spent by consumers outside the home in the United States. Additionally, more than 80 cents of every food dollar is spent on marketing, processing, wholesaling, distribution and retailing.

“It’s easy to forget the true value of our farmers and ranchers, who in some cases are only making pennies to the dollar on their goods, while we’re at our local supermarket,” said NFU President Roger Johnson. “Our Farmer’s Share report reflects the true value that our farmers and ranchers are receiving.”

Sheepdogs Featured in New Documentary

(Jan., 2013) Just this past October, Sheep Industry News (SIN) ran a story about the Soldier Hollow Classic Sheepdog Championships, describing the event, its people and its sheep. An entertaining new documentary has just been released which dives much more deeply into the people and the competition. Documentary filmmaker Andrew Hadra traveled to South Africa, Ireland, Canada and across the United States to capture the story. SIN recently spoke with him about the film.

You can learn more and purchase the DVD on the movie’s website at http://sheepdogmovie.com and check its Facebook page at Away To Me (Sheepdog Movie).
